

Adult Day Reporting

The Adult Day Reporting Program is generally utilized by the Court to monitor people who are failing to pay their required child support. ADR participants are required to check in each day at the Community Corrections office to show proof of their job searches for that week. Participants may also be required to participate in GED classes or some other program that is designed to assist them in becoming more “employable.”